Notice Regarding Research and Training from June in the 2021 Academic Year

In view of the state of emergency and infections in Tokyo, on May 27 the university issued a notice regarding how classes and instruction will be conducted from June 2021.

Scheduled research and training will be managed as follows. We ask that you take suitable measures as needed.

These arrangements are subject to change. Please respond accordingly after any new notices on how classes and instruction will be conducted.

Subjects scheduled for in-person instruction in labs on campus

Permission to proceed will be granted if your request (following the response level indicated for the relevant period, based on the May 27 notice) is approved.

Research and training at the Field Science Center

Permission to proceed will be granted if your request (following the response level indicated for the period, based on the May 27 notice) is approved after consultation with relevant stations, in accordance with virus-related restrictions and lifting of restrictions as published on March 12, 2021, on the Center website at <https://www.kaiyodai.ac.jp/Japanese/academics/center/userinfo.html>. Information on restrictions may be revised as the state of infection changes. Please follow the instructions given in the most recent information.

Research and training on training vessels

1. Onboard training to obtain a marine technician's license

Conducted to the extent possible, taking into account current campus and social conditions.

2. Other training

Currently postponed or canceled. However, regarding training that does not involve meals or short-term stays aboard an anchored ship, please ask the relevant dean or director to decide on approval by submitting your plan as approved by the director of the Center of Marine Research and Operations, including approval to use the training vessel involved. The state of emergency currently applies to training on the Hiyodori and Yayoi.
